

We are committed to academic integrity and will work to ensure that all clients produce original work which represents the fruition of their skills and abilities. We will not do your work for you. Rather, we help you do your best work.

Confidentiality:

We respect your privacy and ensure that all information, data, documents, and communication are kept confidential. The Sworn Scholars Project does not share or disclose any client information, or information about clients, without explicit permission.

Authorship:

Authorship is a critical aspect of scholarship. We are not co-authors and do not expect to be perceived as such. We provide guidance and consultation to make you a better author and improve the value of your work. The client remains the sole author of their work, maintaining complete ownership and responsibility for the content, findings, and conclusions. Clients are welcome to add a ‘thank you’ to The Sworn Scholars Project or Dr. David Bierie in their document, but it is not required.

Engagement:

Our help will only be as valuable as the level of thoughtful and enthusiastic engagement our clients have in their research and the collaboration we offer.

Ethics:

We are committed to ethical practices. We do not support the misrepresentation, alteration, suppression, or selective reporting of data and findings. We do not support plagiarism, alteration of data, and we entrust clients to maintain a transparent and well-documented record of their research and data analysis.

By engaging our services, clients agree to uphold these principles of academic integrity. The Sworn Scholars Project exists to empower law enforcement professionals to become extraordinary in the pursuit of truth, knowledge, and solutions to the most important problems facing society. This responsibility comes with deep obligations to be aware of and militantly follow ethical guidelines.

Policy:

Your university may have rules and policies that dictate which kind of services you are allowed to use in your academic work and/or reporting requirements. The Client must seek, assess, and comply with whatever guidance is required by their program.
